University of San Diego

ANNUAL REPORT 1982/1983

History

The dynamic independent university which occupies the 180-acre campus overlooking Mission Bay emerged from the vision of Bishop Charles F. Buddy, to whom it was imperative that higher education in San Diego include a quality Catholic institution. Through his efforts and those of Reverend Mother Rosalie Hill, RSCJ, the University's predecessor institutions were established: the College for Women, by the Religious of the Sacred Heart, in 1952; and the College for Men and School of Law in 1954.

It was not long before these institutions found themselves working more and more closely, with faculty and students interacting in increasingly shared facilities. By the late 1960's it had become clear that if the two Colleges were to thrive, they should merge, be governed by a single board of trustees with one student body, one faculty, and one president. In 1971, Author E. Hughes, Ph.D. was appointed to the presidency. Under his leadership legal unification took place the following year, actualizing the University which had been chartered in 1949 through the foresight of Bishop Buddy.

Today the University of San Diego enrolls 5,129 students in four professional schools—business administration, education, law, and nursing—the undergraduate College of Arts and Sciences, and the School of Graduate and Continuing Education.

From the Chairman of the Board...

A good university—a university committed to excellence, the fullest possible development of its students, and the exercise of responsible citizenship—is like no other learning environment on earth. In the precision of its management, it can be likened to a successful corporation, while in its care for the mind, spirit, and physical well-being of each student, it is a familial community.

The University of San Diego embodies all those qualities. At a time when our educational system is under critical scrutiny; when—as recent research suggests—many of the nation's colleges and universities are slipping into a routine sameness, it is specially gratifying to be associated with an institution unique in its community and uncommon in its mission. USD is not successful because it has grown; it has grown because it is successful. And it is successful because its leaders have never lost sight of our central purpose: to provide an environment in which human potential can, in a spiritual context, discover and unfold its unique meaning.

From the President...

Sometime in the 1950's, Ernest Hemingway made a statement that has stayed with me over the years. Never confuse action with progress, he said. I think the distinction between these two forces is a good one to bear in mind in reviewing the recent record of the University, for in the flurry of action on this campus it could become all too easy to lose sight of the remarkable progress this institution has made.

A number of benchmark events took place in 1982–1983: groundbreaking for the Helen K. and James S. Copley Library and the Douglas F. Manchester Executive Conference Center; the announcement that USD had successfully completed a $15 million capital campaign; the announcement of a grant of $4.5 million from the Olin Foundation to construct and equip a new facility for the School of Business Administration. All of these—in particular the recognition by the Olin Foundation—set an indelible imprimatur on this University as a signal institution in independent higher education. In corporate language, USD has been identified as a “growth company.”

Such achievements might represent mere “action.” At USD, they represent progress: they happened as the result of long, deliberate work on the part of the trustees, administrators, faculty, and staff; they happened not to spur or simulate growth but to accommodate the growth which had already taken place. And so this report reflects the University's vigor not just in terms of facilities but in terms of what is ultimately more important—academic and human growth.

We are justifiably proud of the University's progress and gratified by the vital role our benefactors have played in making that progress possible.

Author E. Hughes, Ph.D.
President

Growth in campus facilities...

A $4.5 million grant from the Olin Foundation to construct and equip a new facility for the School of Business Administration; 46,000 square feet of the most advanced educational and computer equipment, classrooms, laboratories, and offices for a professional school whose enrollment has tripled in the past five years...groundbreaking for the Helen K. and James S. Copley Library, enabled by grants from the Copley Foundation, USD Trustee Helen K. Copley, and the National Endowment for the Humanities; 38,000 square feet which will more than double the size of the existing library, no longer adequate for a burgeoning student population... the Douglas F. Manchester Executive Conference Center, supported by a leadership gift from the USD trustee whose name it bears; 17,000 square feet serving as the University's premier setting for conferences and Continuing Education sessions... Guadalupe Hall, completed early in the year to house San Diego Law Center and NROTC offices... completed renovation of biology and chemistry laboratories... new playing fields for sports activities... These were the headline stories in a year which saw dramatic changes in the face of the USD campus—"the University's most ambitious building project since it opened 33 years ago," said the San Diego Union editorial.

As a bricks-and-mortar expression of USD's increased academic and community responsibility, the new facilities bear out the vision of the University's founders: that it would become a major center for learning in San Diego.

Lawrence W. Milas (l.), president of the Olin Foundation, tours the campus with President Hughes on the day USD announced the $4.5 million grant which would construct and equip the School of Business Administration building, Olin Hall.

Academic and program growth...

"An excellent academic program taught by a dedicated faculty enables the University to fulfill its academic objectives—namely, to develop a quality academic program, to serve the community in a way consistent with the institution's identity, and to emphasize the integration of professional and liberal learning."

That is how USD was described by a Western Association of Schools and Colleges evaluation team, on campus in October 1982 for the purpose of reaffirming the University's WASC accreditation.

The student population that fall was higher than it had ever been: 5,003 men and women enrolled in programs in the College of Arts and Sciences, the School of Graduate Education, the School of Business Administration, the School of Education, the School of Law, and the Philip Y. Hahn School of Nursing. If few of those students were aware of the accreditation report, all of them knew of the excellence and breadth of the academic offerings. To the 44 major and graduate degree programs already available, the University added the new major in Computer Science, which became immediately one of the degree pursuits most popular among students. The Naval Recruit Officer Training Corps program was established, a joint project with San Diego State University. The Philip Y. Hahn School of Nursing's graduate program received accreditation from the National League for Nursing—a remarkable cachet for a program only five years old. The School of Law extended its overseas programs to include study in Dublin and Cairo. And as these new programs were being introduced, a curriculum committee in the College of Arts and Sciences continued its investigations into the worth and feasibility of other major fields, while reassessing the strengths of the existing core curriculum.

Fundamental to academics at USD is that intellectual growth is not a matter of cerebration alone; it must occur in a matrix of moral and ethical values. That is why the University's classes integrate professional ethics as part of professional preparation.

Faculty growth...

USD measures the growth of its faculty in two fundamental ways. One is by conventional quantitative methods. For example, the number of full-time faculty reached 182 in 1982-1983, an increase of 75% over the full-time contingent a decade before; and 88% of the 1982-1983 faculty (exclusive of the School of Law) held the doctorate degree, compared to 82% five years before. The number of faculty with significant records of publication, research, and service to professional societies and community has risen dramatically.

The other kind of measure—in a sort of paradox—evaluates growth not in terms of change but in terms of continuity. From USD's inception, its faculty has been dedicated to quality teaching and to close interaction with students. Those attitudes still prevail, and in the context of USD's commitment to values, that means growth.

Iris H.W. Engstrand, Ph.D., chairman of the Department of History, having just entered her sixteenth year with the University, is well-qualified to observe continuity. "The basic commitment of the faculty," she says, "has always been present. We believe that the real process of education takes place between two human beings, in and out of the classroom. Personal relationships are at the core of this place. There's an attitude of caring.... There's an unspoken rule among the faculty that you spend as much time on campus as possible, available to students. The time we spend together and the quality of that time create a sense of community. That, I think, is the real strength of USD, and that's why USD has grown."

Barton Thurber, Ph.D., chairman of the Department of English, sees the campus from a somewhat shorter perspective—five years—but an equally insightful and enthusiastic one. "The ideas of the people who began this University have enabled us to be in the right place at the right time. The country is thinking about education, about the importance of the liberal arts curriculum, and because USD has historically—and tenaciously—insisted on the value of liberal arts education, we are positioned very well to let it be known that we do something about it.... The spirit of the faculty in terms of the academic nature of what we're doing and in terms of prospects for the future is very high. I don't know of anyone on the faculty who isn't excited about USD.... The University has done an outstanding job of recruiting excellent young faculty. For the past several years, we have had our pick of the cream of the crop across the nation, and what that means is that students are taught by experts in their disciplines.... Because of our small classes, education takes place in dialogue. Therefore, it's impossible for teachers—even if we wanted to—to prepare lectures and let them stand for years and years. Education here is a living process.... I will make a prediction: within the next five to ten years, USD is going to explode into national awareness as a place known for the excellence of its teaching."

Student growth...

Numbers are part of the 1982-1983 story: a record enrollment of 5,003; a record number of graduates—1,082; students participated in more clubs and intramural sports than ever before; the Campus Ministry and career counselling staffs were busier than ever keeping up with student enthusiasm.

But numbers are just part of the story. The most meaningful message comes from the students themselves, such as these statements by members of the Class of '83:

"This was the best school I could have chosen, for size, for the quality of faculty, for the opportunity for spiritual growth. At USD, I've learned how to learn—how to think, how to study, how to communicate.... Comparing myself now to myself as a freshman, I'm less self-centered. I believe what you should do in life is work to improve the community and find your self-fulfillment through that effort.... Students at USD experience what college is all about, but from a much more human perspective and with more opportunities than on a bigger campus.... The values the University professes are truly transmitted. This place is people-oriented.... Being here has taught me to be open to experiences, to shoot for my dreams, to develop a serious attitude but also to have the right balance of fun. I'd come back here a thousand times."

Growth in community service...

Never an "ivory tower" university, USD is concerned with the community of which it is a part, and that concern has never been more evident than in the range of activities studding the 1982-1983 calendar. USD's services literally spanned the nation, reaching out from Linda Vista—the immediate neighborhood—across the city, the state, and across the nation to Washington, D.C.

Here at home, the University sponsored an Unemployment Fair, designed to bring the city's unemployed together with business firms and agencies... it took its legal and health expertise to its neighbors through the Linda Vista Legal Clinic, enabled by a two-year grant from the Parker Foundation, and through the Linda Vista Nursing Clinic, a project of the Philip Y. Hahn School of Nursing... the San Diego Law Center, a joint project of the School of Law and the County Bar Association, established San Diego's first neighborhood mediation center, in Golden Hill, and concluded plans for the downtown, business-oriented Alternatives to Litigation Center, the only one of its kind in the nation—both centers enabled by a grant from the Weingart Foundation, both focussed on non-litigation dispute resolution... the Alcala Women's Club, a student service group, organized the University's participation in Women's Opportunities Week, a city-wide, week-long recognition of the significant role of women in society... and Continuing Education, through its University of the Third Age, a "mini-university," brought new color to the lives of some of San Diego's senior citizens.

On the regional and national scene, the University played host in September to the Southwest Regional Border Governor's Conference, which brought to campus some 600 conference delegates and the Governors of California and Baja California... in July, USD hosted the three-day White House Conference on Productivity, one of four such high-level regional conferences held throughout the nation during the year. And many USD faculty and administrators served in important professional and civic posts, too numerous to record here but perhaps best symbolized by President Author Hughes' presence on the Commission on White House Fellowships and the board of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities and his presidency of the Association of Independent California Colleges and Universities.

USD's outreach extended internationally through the establishment of the Mexico-U.S. Law Center, a program of the School of Law created to enhance mutual understanding of the two nations' legal systems and to serve as a center for scholarly research.

Bernard Brady, president of the Linda Vista Planning Commission, talks with President Hughes during a campus luncheon held to acquaint the neighborhood with USD's community services.

An estimated 1,000 unemployed came to USD's Unemployment Fair to learn of career opportunities from potential employers and to attend workshops led by USD professionals.

July's White House Conference on Productivity brought top-level government leaders, corporate executives, economists, academics, and agency officials to the campus.

Sheldon Krantz, LL.B., Law School dean, announced the new Mexico-U.S. Law Center at a campus luncheon held for the Southwest Regional Border Governors Conference in September.

Growth in community support...

Community support of the University took a giant leap forward again in 1982-1983. In tangible evidence of USD's growing respect and recognition, gifts soared to $3,749,817 (compared to $2,693,313 in the previous year, a 39% increase), and commitments to the capital campaign totalled $6,411,347, bringing the campaign aggregate to $16.2 million.

Among the most significant gains in the year of report was the growth of the USD Annual Fund—annual unrestricted giving from the University's various support groups, including President's Club, Maudsley Fellows, Corporate Associates, More Hall Advocates, Alcala Society, alumni, and parents; and from the Independent Colleges of Southern California and foundations. Contributions from these sources reached $506,647, compared to $343,021 in the prior year: an increase of 48%. President's Club gifts alone accounted for $151,653 of the total (compared to $82,000), and support from the ICSC membership reached $119,752. Alumni, spurred by a challenge grant from the Irvine Foundation, broke all previous records; 1,037 alumni contributed $96,305—an increase of 109% in amount and twice the number participating compared to 1981-1982.

Lawrence W. Milas, president of the Olin Foundation, said in announcing the landmark grant funding the School of Business Administration facility, that the Olin gift was "an expression of confidence... in the continuing strength of the University of San Diego." He might have been speaking for the 2,292 alumni, parents, friends, corporations, other foundations, and organizations whose support is recognized in the Honor Roll which accompanies this report. That roster, better than any narrative, attests to the community's conviction that USD is a front-rank institution and that its continued success is essential.
